Optimal Resistor Networks

Mark Walters

Queen Mary, University of London

Suppose that we view a graph G as a network of electrical resistors all of resistance one. We can calculate the effective resistance between any two vertices of the graph. Then we can ask which graph minimises the average resistance between pairs of vertices.

In this talk we present some upper and lower bounds including a rather surprising construction for the upper bound which is a mix of random ideas with some deterministic constructions.